Please join us as our distinguished speakers discuss the varying research and data on vaping. Once looked to as a promising smoking cessation tool, e-cigarettes (aka “vaping”) are now gaining negative media attention due to a multistate outbreak of associated lung injuries. More than 10 years after hitting the market, data regarding the health effects of e-cigarettes has yet to be collected by the Food and Drug Administration. With over 800 people sick from vaping-related lung illnesses and at least 14 related deaths, public health officials are scrambling to find answers.
